“ Have you seen any shows if so, which? all on DVD What did you think? I cannot wait to watch the DVD of this show at the comofrt of my house lying on my couch with an ice chilled beer in hand in an air conditioned room just like I did watching all the other shows and truly appreciate the hardwork you put in it. I wish good luck to all the people who worked for this production, and I am sure it will be at least as successful as the previous ones. <http://sqvuru.com> [url=http://fajjgcnmv.com]fajjgcnmv[/url] [link=http://qlqijwywjs.com]qlqijwywjs[/link]###imported-begin###Felipe###imported-end###

“ I feel like Paul didn't want to announce to Alex's family that he was Alex's therapist. Alex may have kept it a secret that he was in therapy and Paul may not have wanted to betray his client's trust regardless of if he had passed away. I agree with Sarah in that the comment could be representative of their new relationship. But I'd probably use the word escape instead of hide because they are using this new relationship to escape each of their own problems in their life. Clearly I think that the story Paul told about his father leaving his mom and re-marrying a younger woman made Laura uncomfortable. The story is strikingly similar to their situation and hearing Paul tell how he is following in his father's footsteps could have made Laura feel as though she was leading Paul down the wrong path. She could have felt responsible for this and this could have led her to feeling extremely uncomfortable and then leaving. I don't think Laura has real feelings for Paul. I think that her feelings are clouded and that eventually she will realize this. I agree with Morgan and that a lot of her basis for reasons that her and Paul should be together are on very basic and shallow things. When Paul finally tells her something real and intimate, his father leaving his mom for a younger woman, she clearly doesn't like what she hears and it causes her enough discomfort to make her leave. - Joey Liner
